Artist Demo:

Members welcomed back Lydia Pottoff, an excellent pastel artist. While working to finish an autumn landscape scene, she discussed her process of completing a painting. She pointed out that pastels are comprised of the same pigments used to make oil, acrylic, and watercolor paints; pastels are pretty much just drier pigments and are compressed using a different binder than the other mediums. She explained that for her skies, she starts at the top with cobalt blue, blends into teal, and finishes near the horizon with lavender. She was well-received and answered a lot of questions from members.

“Nature is not only all that is visible to the eye... it also includes the inner pictures of the soul.”
— Edvard Munch
